The city, the state, and the country were shaken by the murder of George Floyd on May 25, and by the unrest that broke out across Minneapolis in response as citizens took to the streets to demand change.

A Note About Our

2020 Library Funding Commitment

Friends of HCL is more committed than ever to standing with and supporting our library. This year, with you and other generous donors, we are determined to meet our $1.49 million annual funding commitment even during these extraordinary, challenging times.

We are so grateful for the incredible generosity from donors across the country and world in support of the Local Library Equity Fund. Thank you for rallying around our library in a time of need!

When plans for our 2020 library funding were set last year, the world was a very different place than it is now. No one knew just how much a virus and a collective cry for justice would alter daily life at every level. As a patron-first institution, the library has adjusted quickly to meet those needs, shifting how it delivers its resources and services in response. Friends is continuously working with the library to evaluate the most impactful ways to invest your contributions and put your gifts to work directly in the community. Here are some of the important programs and resources you are supporting:

- Anti-Racist Titles in the Digital Collections
- Virtual Homework Help and Summer Learning
- Outreach to Incarcerated Individuals and their Children
- Community Embedded Library Service
- East Lake Library Restoration
- Teen Tech Programming
- Special Collections Digitization and Preservation
- Free Local Music Access on MNspin
- At Home Services to Seniors and Homebound Patrons
- $1.49M 2020 Funding Commitment to HCL
- Special Collections Digitization and Preservation
- Programing
- And more!

In this newsletter, you’ll find just a few of the many stories of how your donations are making tangible impacts in the lives of so many. Your support is needed now more than ever as we rebuild our world. Because whatever the future holds, our library will stand at its center, a place of refuge and hope for today and generations to come. Thank you!

We’re Still Here

New Realities for At Home Services Patrons

“We cannot leave our apartments anymore. We have to wear masks whenever we leave to take the garbage out.”

This message, written by an At Home Services patron on the back of a materials request form, is a typical one in the time of COVID. Dillon Young, Outreach Services Manager, explains that with every book or material, a slip is included for patrons to request their next read. Before the pandemic, patrons often wrote thank you notes on the back, or continued their list of requests. But now, in these uncertain times with increased isolation, some patrons are now using this space to simply process their new realities to people they know will listen.

Donors, like you, help At Home Services patrons stay connected during isolation.

Some patrons with long- or short-term disability, illness, or physical impairment do not have access to all the resources the library provides. That’s where At Home Services steps in, sending materials—books, DVDs, CDs, audiobooks, large print books—directly to patrons’ homes, helping keep them connected. This service also provides something less tangible but just as important: social interaction.

Building Relationships from Afar

“People are living longer, but also becoming more disconnected, which means people are living longer and longer in isolation,” Dillon
“The library’s here to keep our patrons connected to the world, to all the things that are important in life. We keep them connected to what keeps them whole.”

Looking Forward

“It’s not the what, it’s the how that’s important,” Dillon says. In other words, the materials are secondary to how the work is being done. The books and DVDs are a gateway to the greater work of getting to know who their patrons are and learning how to make those connections despite any challenges that arise.

As a library donor, you are directly helping this work take place. At Home Services circulated more than 46,700 books and materials to 867 patrons in 2019, and received more than 16,000 phone calls. Already in 2020, staff members have made hundreds of personal phone calls to update patrons on services during COVID and simply to check in. The ability of departments like At Home Services to pivot during a crisis, to have the resources to evaluate their programs, and to continue their services through challenging times depends on the support of Friends. Your generosity is keeping patrons connected to their whole selves.

While no one is sure how the future will take shape, the At Home Services staff have never been more sure of their purpose. “A lot of what we provide as a service has changed dramatically,” Dillon says, “but what hasn’t changed is the desire of Hennepin County Library Outreach Services to continue to support people that rely on our services and our staff. We’re still here.”

These connections have only become more important now that patrons are socially and physically distanced, their movements even more limited than before. The challenge facing At Home Services is balancing the importance of the physical safety of patrons, many of whom are in high-risk categories for the coronavirus, while also recognizing the increased importance of staying engaged and connected to their library lifeline. The solution? Strengthened relationships.

The At Home Services phone line, operational from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Mondays through Fridays, has become even more popular. Most of the calls are initiated because a patron wants to receive materials, but the patrons also want to talk with someone who recognizes their voice, who knows their name and their interests and who can share in their life experiences, even from afar. Sometimes, the At Home Services staff member is the only person the patron will talk to that day. These personal relationships are so valuable in a world where physical interactions are gone but social interactions are vital.
Our library, at the very heart of our Hennepin County neighborhoods, heard this call, felt this call, and witnessed the collective power of people standing beside one another in support of a shared humanity.

“Libraries are so important to every community. Hang in there, and know you are supported in this difficult time.”

During the unrest, Minneapolis Central Library experienced several broken windows, and East Lake Library sustained significant fire, smoke and water damage. The outpouring of support in response—the donations from around the country and world, the messages and notes from donors and patrons, the willingness of people to lend a hand in any way—filled our hearts. It is clear from the overwhelming response just how deep the community’s love for the library goes, how central a role this beloved institution plays in the lives of its patrons. Every note and every gift represents a person who cannot imagine a world without the library in it. For instance, Rena from Madison, WI, stated: “Libraries are so important to every community. Hang in there, and know you are supported in this difficult time.”

The response also demonstrated that you, our Friends, are resolved and committed to dismantling systemic racism and enacting true and meaningful change to move us toward a more just world. We know there are no simple ways to confront the brutal truths of our society, but learning is a first step forward. The library, dedicated to educating and making critical change, quickly made available the most popular anti-racist audio and e-books for download with no holds through the summer, including: How to Be an Antiracist by Ibram X. Kendi, White Fragility by Robin DiAngelo, and Me and White Supremacy by Layla Saad. To meet the incredible demand for these titles, Friends has committed $150,000 to help fund the fees associated with these e-book downloads.

As the fundraising partner, we are dedicated to standing with our library as it continues to do what it does best: listen to the community, respond to its needs, and serve as a beacon of hope and unity. Together, we will all rise to the challenge of our times, listening, learning, and shifting our work to better fulfill our values and serve one another.

In a note from Chad Helton, the newly hired Library Director who will join our library in August, he wrote: “When we think about the future, we often speak of the future with uncertainty, as if the future happens to us, and we have no hand in its creation. We create our future, and the future of this community is bright, because we as individuals, and we as an organization, will work tirelessly for what we believe in, and that is wholehearted dedication to the betterment of all of the community we serve.”

It is Friends like you, those with open hearts, who will help us create a better future through our library. We know there is work to be done, and we look forward to tackling it with you, and to keeping you updated on our progress forward. If the events of the past few months have taught us anything, it is that now is the time for justice, for change, for hope, and for love.

“Together, we will all rise to the challenge of our times, listening, learning, and shifting our work to better fulfill our values and serve one another.”

Brooklyn Park Library’s Teen Tech Squad Moves Forward

How one Teen Tech Squad carries their momentum into the new days ahead

From the Teen Tech Squad Perspective

If you were to ask one of Brooklyn Park Library’s Teen Tech Squad (TTS) members to describe the program, you’d probably hear many similar words: fun, learning, kids, science, growth, team, technology, cool. In fact, to hear them speak about their work sounds like what we all imagine an ideal learning environment to be. Workshops are interactive, collaborative, and engaging, in addition to being challenging and rigorous. Young people who take part in the program explore science, engineering, and technology through rockets, through slime, through board-game-inspired escape rooms. And the students and teens learn about themselves, too, along the way.

The impact of Teen Tech Squad, in some ways, can be difficult to measure. Nearly 1,000 young people from underserved neighborhoods participate in the program’s twice monthly workshops each year, and 34 high school students are employed as workshop teen leaders, gaining invaluable program design, curriculum development, safety planning, and group facilitation experience. For the teen leaders, however, their measures of success for the younger workshop participants are less quantitative. They measure smiles and experiences and confidence alongside attendance. When asked about the impact of the program, they cite stories, cherished memories, and lessons learned about themselves and others.

“Teen Tech Squad has meant so much to me because I’ve learned about myself through this program.”
Anoka High School senior Kathryn tells us, “Teen Tech Squad has meant so much to me because I’ve learned about myself through this program. I’ve also come to understand that I can learn so much from other people. Teen Tech Squad has just blessed me so much! With each workshop, I’ve realized how important it is to be part of a team and respect the strengths of your team.”

For Osseo High School senior Owen, who will be attending Stanford University in the fall to study robotics engineering, being part of Teen Tech Squad has been about reaching a hand back to help bring others forward. His favorite part of the program is “how all of the kids are so passionate, and they’re so sure about everything that they know. I just love their creativity. It reminds me of how creative my community is, and it’s helped push me toward trying to create other opportunities for other people.”

Engaging from Afar

These connections are the heart of Teen Tech Squad, for both the teen leaders and the young people engaging with the program. Understandably, then, the inability to gather has been a tricky transition. But the Teen Tech Squad team is responding with innovative solutions and rising to the challenge of how to connect over distance without losing the true magic of the program. They have created a website and curated a selection of activities for kids to do online that they describe as “learning, but still fun.” They’ve also started a YouTube channel with informative videos and reinvigorated their Instagram account.

With the support of donors, Friends of the Hennepin County Library is contributing more than $100,000 to Teen Tech Squad this year, which will allow the development of future STEM leaders like the Brooklyn Park Library team to continue. The generous support of library Friends also offers our adult mentors and teen leaders the opportunity to pivot quickly to meet the challenges of today when the communities served by our eight Teen Tech Squads across Hennepin County are hit the most by hardship. Despite the challenges the team is facing during this time of physical distancing, these determined teens are not looking to slow down anytime soon. Owen says, “It’s exciting to always try and outdo ourselves. We’re constantly trying to up what we did last time and make kids even happier and more excited about what’s possible. It’s just fun.” So, what do they have planned next? We cannot wait to see!
Leave a legacy for your Library—and honor your values—by making a planned gift to Friends of the Hennepin County Library. The power of your gift will have an incredible influence on lives all across our community, far beyond your lifetime.

Gratitude Diaries

one donor shared with me, “For us, the library is a cherished resource, but it’s not an essential one. We have access to the internet; we have a safe place to be during the day; we have other ways of occupying and entertaining ourselves. But there are thousands—thousands—of people that rely on the library for those things. For them, the library is essential.”
